Help for Monier-Williams Dictionary Search

Purpose

Locates and displays the links to those HTML files in the Monier-Williams Dictionary that contain lines with text that matches the search string. The display consists of the link to the HTML file followed by one or lines with the matching string shown in bold type.

To pinpoint the desired text click on the link and then use the search tools built into each browser (Edit > Find in Internet Explorer and Search > Find in this page in Netscape)

Advanced Search

Search Monier-Williams:

Partial match	Match case	Show 1 lines/file	Go

By default the search engine:

- Locates text strings deliminted by non-text characters. So if your search string is ship it matches " ship " or " Ship " or "(Ship)" or " ship.", but not " shipping " or " shipped ".
- Ignores the case of characters, thus " ship ", " Ship ", and " SHIP " all match.
- Displays only the first matching line in a given HTML file. Thus if "Ship" occurs on 17 different lines in a single HTML file only the first line that contains the match is displayed.

The above search form lets you override the default values if you need more precise control of your search.

iti ind. (fr. pronominal base 3. i), in this manner, thus (in its original signification iti refers to something that has been said or thought, or lays stress on what precedes

• in the Brāhmaṇas it is often equivalent to 'as you know', reminding the hearer or reader of certain customs, conditions, &c. supposed to be known to him). In quotations of every kind iti means that the preceding words are the very words which some person has or might have spoken, and placed thus at the end of a speech it serves the purpose of inverted commas (ity uktvā, having so said

• iti kṛtvā, having so considered, having so decided). It may often have reference merely to what is passing in the mind, e.g. bālo'pi nâvamantavyo manuṣya iti bhūmipaḥ, a king, though a child, is not to be despised, saying to one's self, 'he is a mortal', (Gr. 928.) In dram. iti tathā karoti means 'after these words he acts thus.' Sometimes iti is used to include under one head a number of separate objects aggregated together (e.g. ijyâdhyayanadānāni tapaḥ satyaṃ kṣamā damaḥ alobha iti mārgo'yam, 'sacrificing, studying, liberality, penance, truth, patience, self-restraint, absence of desire', this course of conduct, &c.) iti is sometimes followed by evam, iva, or a demonstrative pronoun pleonastically (e.g. tām brūyād bhavatī7ty evam, her he may call 'lady', thus). iti may form an adverbial compound with the name of an author (e.g. iti-pāṇini, thus according to Pāṇini). It may also express the act of calling attention (lo! behold!) It may have some other significations, e.g. something additional (as in ityādi, et caetera), order, arrangement specific or distinctive, and identity. It is used by native commentators after quoting a rule to express 'according to such a rule' (e.g. anudāttaṅita ity ātmanepadam bhavati, according to the rule of Pāṇini i, 3, 12, the Ātmane-pada takes place). kim iti = kim, wherefore, why? itthā ind. Ved. thus

• (often used in the Ṛig-veda, and sometimes only to lay stress on a following word
• therefore by native etymologists [Nir.] considered as a particle of affirmation.) itthā is often connected with words expressing devotion to the gods &c. in the sense of thus, truly, really
• especially with dhī as an adjective. Hence itthā-dhī = such, i.e. true (satyā) or real worship. Similarly, mfn. so devout, so pious, i.e. very devout

• , the enemies wishing indeed to hurt were in nowise able to hurt RV. i, 147, 3). id is often added to words expressing excess or exclusion (e.g. viśva it, every one indeed
• śaśvad it, constantly indeed
• eka it, one only). At the beginning of sentences it often adds emphasis to pronouns, prepositions, particles (e.g. tvam it, thou indeed • yadi it, if indeed, &c.) id occurs often in the Ṛig-veda and Atharva-veda, seldom in the Brāhmaṇas, and its place is taken in classical Sanskṛit by eva and other particles

u 1
u the fifth letter and third short vowel of the alphabet, pronounced as the u in full ukāra ○kāra m. the letter or sound u
u 2
u ind. an interjection of compassion, anger L
• a particle implying assent, calling, command L
u 3
u ind. an enclitic copula used frequently in the Vedas
• (as a particle implying restriction and antithesis, generally after pronominals, prepositions, particles, and before nu and su, equivalent to) and, also, further
• on the other hand (especially in connexion with a relative, e.g. ya u, he on the contrary who &c.) This particle may serve to give emphasis, like id and eva, especially after prepositions or demonstrative pronouns, in conjunction with nu, vai, hi, cid, &c. (e.g. ayám u vām purutámo.. johaviiti [RV. iii, 62, 2], this very person your worshipper invokes you &c.) It is especially used in the figure of speech called Anaphora, and particularly when the pronouns are repeated (e.g. tám u stuṣa índram tám gṛṇīṣe [RV. ii, 20, 4], him I praise, Indra, him I sing). It may be used in drawing a conclusion, like the English 'now' (e.g. tád u táthā ná kuryāt [ŚBr. v, 2, 2, 3], that now he should not do in such a manner), and is frequently found in interrogative sentences (e.g. ká u tác ciketa [RV. i, 164, 48], who, I ask, should know that?) Pāṇini calls this particle uñ to distinguish it from the interrogative u. In the Pada-pāṭha it is written ūm. In the classical language u occurs only after atha, na, and kim, with a slight modification of the sense, and often only as an expletive (kim)
• u - u or u - uta, on the one hand - on the other hand
• partly - partly
• as, well - as
